

I

There is a certain definite geometry in which the human self reflects itself.

Throughout history, the most valuable and most beautiful things which man has made, were those which we call timeless ones.

These things are timeless, because they reflect the inner structure of ourselves.

They also reflect the ultimate unity of space.

This is not a matter of opinion, but a verifiable and objective fact.

We can recognize these things objectively, by asking ourselves to what extent a given thing can function as a mirror of the self.

People from all walks of life, and all cultures, agree about the things which are the mirrors of the self.

It is in this sense that these things are timeless ones.